Constantinople,

Constantinople, as we call the ancient city of Constantine, and latest seat of the Turkish power, is not a single city, but an agglomeration of several cities. ntterly unlike each other in appearance, construction, and inhabitants. It is composed of Stamboul and Soutari on composed of Stamboul and Scutari on the Asiatic side, which are truly Turkish, and Pera, Galata, and Tophane, which are European, every nationality and every language under the sun finding its representatives among that exceedingly mixed and miscellaneous population. The natural loveliness of the scenery through which you approach the Turkish capital by water, and the almost magic beauty of the Golden Horn, Scragico Point, and the Bosphorus, with the cockle-anell calques swiftly cleaving through the waters, with their picturesque boatmeu—all these, though often described, never weary the eye or nten described, never weary the eye or onten described, never weary the eye or fancy, and language can not exaggerate their attractions. With the charm of novelty superadded they are simply enchanting. But the charm ceases when the voyager steps ashore, whether on the European side at Pera or Tophane, or on the Asiatic at Stamboul or Scutari. The sights, sounds, and smells which greet the several senses, and the shab-by, squalid appearance of place and people on nearer view, dispet the li-lusion lent by distance and by an atmos-phere and sky more than Italian in their purity and clearness, added to the charms of an architecture most im-posing from afar off, but losing much on nearer view, as do the costumes and their wearers. Landing at Pera, for ex-ample, whose steep, break-neck streets scarcely admit of other than pedestrian scarcely admit of other than pedestrian ascent or descent, you see the powerful Turkish "hamals" or porters, with burdens strapped on their broad shoulders by a banu passing around their foreheads, which four-legged beasts of burden would stagger under, toiling before you up the steep hills—which are miscailed streets—leading the way with your luggage to the far-famed hostelry of Misserl, the Dragomen of "Eothen." Through these streets, dodging other bearers of burdens, you wend your way, encountering in transit more odors (and not "of the attargul's perfume") than even Cologne can boast of in Coleridge's verse; and witness as you proceed how even Cologne can boast of in Coleridge's verse; and witness as you proceed now flesh can be fishified, in the outward Orientalizing of the hybrid European Levantines who throng those narrow ways. As before observed, Pers, Galata, and Tophane are the European quaters of Constantinople, and are as like as three peas. A little that is complimentary either to these places or their population can conscientiously be said, probably the less said the better.—[Fraser's Magazine. ser's Magazine.

CHROMOS.

Landscape, and Sheep, &c., 11x26 each, $5 a pair.

The first is a shepherdess leading her flock in the early evening. The whole scene is exquisitely natural; the animals are painted true to life; the landscape is beautiful and linely drawn, and the action of the shepherdess in carrying the little tired lamb in her arms, suggestive of tender affection and gentleness. No one can see this picture without admiring it.

The other is a herd of cattle in summer, refreshing themselves in the cool water of the pasture lands. The sun is declining behind a dense mass of forest trees, so dense that the shadows are cast on the water in which the cattle are standing. The country beyond, however, is still enjoying the light. The position standing. The country beyond, nowever, is still enjoying the light. The position and expression of the animals are most excellent, so good, indeed, that like the companion piece (the sheep), one loves to stand and examine and gaze on its

GATHERING PRIMROSES, 17x22 - - - - $1 50 IN THE WOODS, 17x22----- 1 50

GATHERING PRIMROSES is a copy of a celebrated English Water Color Painting. The scene is in the woods in the early spring. The trees are yet bare of foliage, while the ground is covered with a rich carpet of green. In the background is the sea, lying calm and bright, in the sunshine of a beautiful May day. Two little girls are represented as gathering the early flowers. The expression and position are very natural. One is stooping in the act of plucking a flower with one hand, while the other rests upon a basket nearly filled with primrosss.

IN THE WOODS is also a copy of an English Water Color Painting. It represents a densely wooded land. The trees are high and the foliage abundant as in the summer season. The picture is expressive and beautiful, and a fitting companion piece to Gathering Primroses.
